MISCELLANEOUS READING. AN ISLAND AFLOAT.

It excited considerable curiosity, as it appeared unlike anything ever seen on the lake before .-As all had a desire to know more about it, several young men, in boats, started in pursuit, and after a sturdy pull with the oars it was at last overbauled some five miles from shore. It was sufficiently firm to bear up a man-as Dr. Beardsley stepped on shore and took possession in behalf of Uncle Sam. The island was not wholly uninhabited, as several small birds were seen. The highest points of this novel island were about five feet above the surface of the water, and the plants stood firm and erect,
